Forward

The initial processing of this collection and the preparation of an inventory were made possible by a grant from the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, a granting arm of the United States National Archives and Records Administration. The original arrangement of the papers was done by Museum volunteer Todd Poole, later amended by librarian Cathy Matero, and substantially expanded and updated by volunteer Jean Hodgkins.

Acquisition

This is an open collection. Many items were sent to Maine Maritime Museum over the years by ships' crews, participants in launching ceremonies, or others employed by or connected to Bath Iron Works. There are also a substantial number of clippings collected by the museum itself. Parts of the collection are not accessioned.

Restrictions

Some items in this collection may be under copyright by Bath Iron Works or other publishers. There are no restrictions on the remainder.

Physical Condition

Material is generally in good condition. Some items are photocopies of originals not held in this collection.

Processing Notes

This is an open collection, continuously expanded as new material arrives. Material about Bath Iron Works that is donated with a larger collection is usually kept with that collection. MS-55 is primarily composed of items that arrived singly, and is organized solely according to a schema developed by the library. Folders have not been numbered to allow for the addition of new folders where necessary.

Related Materials

MS-59, which contains company records for Bath Iron Works, is the most extensive manuscript collection related to the shipyard. Other corporate collections include MS-156 (hull specifications), MS-265, MS-520, and MS-520 (Portland drydock). There is also related manuscript material in collections donated by former Bath Iron Works executives, namely MS-33 (Archibald Main), MS-60 and 104 (Pete and John R. Newell), MS-61 (G. Baer Connard), and MS-62 (Omar King). Collections from former employees and related organizations include MS-15 (John A. Lord), MS-34 (Henry L. Kingsbury), MS-35 (Hyde Family), MS-36 (William A. Fairburn), MS-68 (Leonard P. Litchfield), MS-100 (George M. Woodman), MS-116 (Oliver J. Foster), MS-381 (Stanley L. French), MS-410 (Kenneth Snowdon), MS-449 (James Harvie), MS-493 (Douglas Tuck), MS-573 (Dora C. Brown), and MS-627 (Revere Brass Foundry).

The library also holds extensive photograph collections related to Bath Iron Works. Many of these can be found in PC-3. Specific collections include PC-299 (James Stilphen), PC-141, PC-158, PC-229, PC-231, PC-237, PC-297, PC-327, and PC-334. Hundreds of audio-visual tapes are in PC-1.

Historical Note

Bath Iron Works was incorporated in 1884. The company had grown out of a small iron foundry purchased by Thomas Worcester Hyde shortly after the Civil War, which he had developed into a well-respected manufacturer of windlasses and other ship machinery. In 1888, Hyde acquired the defunct Goss Marine Iron Works and its sophisticated engine-making plant. By 1890, he had transformed this into a fully operational iron shipyard, the first in Bath, with contracts to build two gunboats for the US Navy. (The production of windlasses was divided into a parallel business, called the Hyde Windlass Company, in 1896. Hyde Windlass was re-incorporated into Bath Iron Works in the 1960s.)

Bath Iron Works flourished in the early twentieth century, producing a mix of naval vessels, commercial steamers, and yachts. Unable to weather the shipbuilding slump that followed World War I, however, the company closed in 1925. It was resurrected in 1927 by William S. "Pete" Newell as Bath Iron Works Corporation. It survived the Great Depression by building yachts, fishing trawlers, and small naval vessels, then went on to produce 83 destroyers during World War II.

After the war, Bath Iron Works built a long succession of fishing trawlers for the French government, followed by more Navy contracts and a number of cargo vessels. In 1967, it became part of a conglomerate called Bath Industries, Ltd., later known as Congoleum Corporation. The shipyard was acquired by Prudential Insurance in 1986 and by General Dynamics in 1995. In the 21st century, it has almost exclusively produced destroyers for the US Navy.

Since 1940, Bath Iron Works has operated a steel fabrication facility in East Brunswick, known as the Hardings Plant, which supports the shipyard in Bath. During World War II, the company was also the operating partner in the Todd-Bath Iron Works shipyard in South Portland, Maine, which produced Liberty- and Ocean-class freighters for the American and British war efforts. Bath Iron Works briefly returned to Portland in the 1980s to operate a dry-dock repair facility. However, the majority of operations continue on the south side of Bath, where they have been since 1888.

Scope and Content Note

This is a collection of ephemera and publications from, about, or related to Bath Iron Works. Manuscripts, photographs, and audio-visual material are filed in separate collections.

Series I contains ephemera (excluding periodicals) produced by Bath Iron Works that pertains to the company as a whole. This includes advertisements, annual reports, brochures, catalogs, brief corporate histories, and material related to significant shipbuilding projects or shipyard improvements. Notable items include an auction catalog for the sale of the bankrupt shipyard in 1926 and several catalogs of marine hardware from the 1880s and 1890s.

Series II contains material related to specific vessels built at Bath Iron Works, filed alphabetically by the original name of the vessel. Material here includes launching invitations and programs, brochures, ship histories, magazine and newspaper articles, scattered correspondence, notes, and sea trial schedules. Not every vessel is represented by the same quantity or variety of material.

Series III contains news clippings about Bath Iron Works, arranged chronologically. These mostly come from local newspapers, and are actively collected.

Series IV contains periodicals published by Bath Iron Works for their employees. The two principal publications here are The Log, published from 1965 to 1998, and its successor, titled BIW News or The Shipbuilder.

Series V contains periodicals published by employee unions or other groups principally associated with and concerned about affairs at Bath Iron Works.
